THE HISTORY OF NEW CONDUIT STREET

THE HISTORY OF NEW CONDUIT STREET

Kenneth Bush Solicitors

The History

New Conduit Street

The origin of the name New conduit street is based on the river and mill that used to supply water to King's Lynn (Bishop's Lynn at the time). The water was supplied through New Conduit Street which is why it was named 'Conduit Street'.

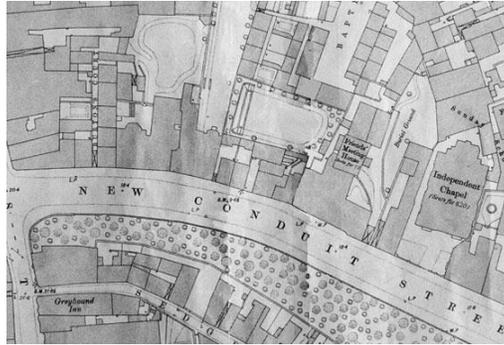

Burnet's plan of Kings Lynn 1846

Kettlemills was situated by the East Gate in the northeast corner of town on the River Gay also known as the Gaywood river. Water was only originally available for one to two hours a day through a roughly bored tree trunk, the tree of choice tended to be elm. Families had to store the water in their own pits. This system would eventually be found to be wasteful and dangerous to health as the pipes and pits were near to cesspools and drains.

Some of these tree pipes dating from the early 19th century have been found in New Conduit Street in recent excavations.

At one point there was a Quaker meeting house, an independent Church and a burial ground all situated on New Conduit Street as well as more Sunday School buildings

King's Lynn 1886

New Conduit Street has seen a dramatic transformation since the early 1900's:

The road was realigned and shops have been built on the other side of the road, which has now been pedestrianised.

Captain George Vancouver

Captain George Vancouver

Captain George was born in New Conduit Street on 22 June 1757.

George Vancouver was the son of John Vancouver, the Deputy Collector of Customs and Collector of Town Dues at Lynn.

In 1772 he joined the Royal Navy. He sailed with Captain Cook on two journeys to the Pacific before being appointed Commander of The Discovery to explore the North-West of America. He surveyed 5000 miles of coast from California north to Alaska.

Vancouver city in British Columbia is named after him as is the Vancouver Centre in King's Lynn. His statue stands on the quayside in King's Lynn near to Custom House.
